It covers a lot in a very few, perhaps too few pages. Graham Sumner writes well and I enjoy his work. I prefer the larger single volume called Roman Military Dress as it covers all the three time frames covered by these books.0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Roman Military Clothing (3): AD 400-640 (Men-at-Arms) (v. 3)By mahdi1raySplendid work. Author shows his expertise on the subject. Well researched, easy to read, and well written. A must for uniformologists, reenactors , miniature wargamers and antiquarians. As an historian, a military man and a miniature wargamer this work has special meaning for me.0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Roman military clothingBy m ziemannAnother period of Roman military history covered very well. This is not period of Roman history, but I found this book to be very informational. Recommend to any one interested in this period of late Roman history.

This book is the concluding part of a rigorous study of the literary, sculptural, pictorial and archaeological evidence for Roman military clothing, covering the last days of the Western Empire, and the much longer record of the Eastern, in the 5th to 7th centuries. The evidence from this enormously colourful period – when Germanic and Persian styles, first introduced by mercenaries, were widely adopted by Roman armies – is particularly rich. The text is illustrated with many photographs of rare textile finds, and mosaic artwork; with careful drawings of other figurative sources; and with Graham Sumner's meticulous and dazzling colour reconstructions.

From the PublisherPacked with specially commissioned artwork, maps and diagrams, the Men-at-Arms series is an unrivalled illustrated reference on the history, organisation, uniforms and equipment of the world's military forces, past and present.About the AuthorDr Raffaele D'Amato, born in 1964, obtained a PhD in Romano-Byzantine Law in 1993 at the University of Turin. While practising as a jurist he has pursued his passion for early military history, publishing a number of specialist articles and booklets. He is currently collaborating with Prof Koliass of Athens University on research into the arms and armours of the Eastern Roman army, while studying with Prof Ravegnani of the University of Venice to obtain a second degree in Byzantine history. This is his first book for Osprey.
