Imperial Japanese units attacked the Republic of China's commercial hub at Shanghai and its capital at Nanjing. Chinese forces would respond, setting the stage for a bloody battle and a bloody aftermath. "Shanghai and Nanjing 1937" is an Osprey Campaign Series book, authored by Benjamin Lai with illustrations by Giuseppe Rava. The narrative traces a confusing months-long Japanese campaign, one expected to end Chinese resistance to Japanese incursions. In fact, as the author demonstrates, the Chinese responded forcefully. The Chinese military chain of command was not up to sustaining the fight against a sophisticated modern military force. However, Chinese bravery ignited warfare still in progress in 1945, when Japan surrendered to its combined Allied opponents. The battle narrative is supported by a good selection of maps, battle diagrams, illustrations, and period and modern photographs. The author does not shy away from describing the horrific massacres that followed the fall of Shanghai and Nanjing. The Japanese Army, literally, took no prisoners. The actions of a few foreigners in the international settlements in the cities saved thousands, but many more would die. This concise but informative account is highly recommended for highlighting one of the largely forgotten campaigns of the Second World War. 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. From 1931, China and Japan had been embroiled in a number of small-scale conflicts that had seen vast swathes of territory being occupied by the Japanese. On 7 July 1937, the Japanese engineered the Marco Polo Bridge Incident, which led to the fall of Beijing and Tianjin and the start of a de facto state of war between the two countries. This force then moved south, landing an expeditionary force to take Shanghai and from there drive west to capture Nanjing. This fully illustrated book tells the story of the Japanese assault on these two great Chinese cities. The battle of Shanghai was the first large-scale urban warfare of World War II and one of the bloodiest battles of the entire Sino-Japanese War. The determined resistance by Chinese inflicted sizable Japanese casualties, and may well have contributed to the subsequent massacre of prisoners and civilians in the battle of Nanjing, tarnishing Japan's reputation in the eyes of the world.
