A compelling narrative of the Soviet side of the space race By Alexander Sabelnikov I guess, I cannot rate or review the book because I am a coauthor. But I can cite a short CNN Editor's note before the excerpt from the book, which described Gagarin's first manned at [...] episodes/08/book.excerpt/ - 16k: "Filmmaker Vladimir Suvorov recorded the Soviet Union's space program from 1959 to 1969, including the April 12, 1961, launch of Yuri Gagarin -- the first man in space. In the book "The First Manned

Spaceflight: Russia's Quest for Space," Suvorov's nephew, Alexander Sabelnikov, has compiled his uncle's notes into a compelling narrative of the Soviet side of the space race". The review and the excerpt was published on-line in 1997 and was alive for several years, but unfortunately is no longer available.

Offers an insider's view on the early era of Russian space flight, based on notes by a documentary cinematographer who eyewitnessed events between 1959 and 1969 and had personal contact with high-level officials and cosmonauts. Includes bw photos. For general readers. Annotation c. by Book News, In
